

Doves and Pigeons in Santiago del Estero

Due to the richness and the variety of the flora, the land in Santiago del Estero serves as a natural shelter for an important variety of animals. The rise on the cereal sowing in the last ten years and also the investment on more infrastructures for the agricultural sector have increased the dove and pigeon population considerably in this province. In fact, this province is nowadays considered to be the province with the highest volume of pigeons and doves in Argentina by many hunting experts.

The hunting spots are north of the province and there is a distance of approximately two hours between the Airport of Santiago del Estero and the estancia where we lodge the hunters.

Unlike Córdoba and other provinces, in Santiago del Estero doves and pigeons coexist in the same area, characterized by wild scrubland. It is usual to hunt them together in the roost, feed lot fields, or in the surrounding area where they drink and eat.

The hunting spots are extremely wild, and there is a vast forestation and big cereal fields, where corn and sorghum are mainly cultivated for cattle fattening. The possibility of hunting both species in the same area is one of the main attractions for hunters because they do not have to travel.
